Introduction

The University requires that the outcomes of its research should generally be publicly available. However it recognises that from time-to-time restrictions on availability may be necessary where intellectual property (“IP”) is at stake, commercial contracts must be honoured, public sensitivity and national security must be protected, or cultural or personal privacy must be respected. This document describes the conditions under which theses are made available, and the conditions and procedures by which they may be embargoed.

Definitions

Embargo – a restriction placed on access and availability of a thesis for a defined period of time.

Thesis – for the purposes of this policy, includes dissertations as well as masters and doctoral theses.

Sensitive thesis – a thesis that contains material that is objectionable, offensive, contrary to public safety or national security.

Policy Statement

The University endorses the principle that research theses and dissertations are available for public inspection and consultation for research and study purposes, and reasonable quotation may be made from such a thesis or dissertation, provided that proper acknowledgement of its source is made.

Theses are usually held in electronic (PDF) form¹. The University Librarian is the University's official custodian of such documents, although academic departments/schools may also hold copies. This policy applies to all copies.

Borrowing and Consultation

A copy or reproduction of the whole or any part of a print or digital copy of a thesis may be made only in accordance with the Copyright Act 1994 \(New Zealand Legislation website\) and with the consent in writing of the author (which is normally granted at the time the thesis is submitted).

Access to theses is normally through the electronic copy. However, where there is only a print copy available this will be provided for consultation only.

Embargo of Theses

The University recognises that the author of a thesis has a right to request that conditions restricting access to it be imposed. Decisions on embargoes will be made by the Dean of Postgraduate Research, except in the case of a sensitive thesis which will be monitored by the Deputy Vice-Chancellor (DVC). Students should consult their supervisor(s) before deciding whether or not to place an embargo on their thesis.

Exceptional circumstances in which a thesis might be embargoed include:

- i. The applicant made a prior agreement with an outside person or body connected with the research that publication should be delayed after completion of the research, and the purpose of the delay is to protect new information of commercial value.
- ii. Either the applicant or the University is making, or intends to make, a patent application concerning the subject matter of the research.
- iii. The applicant plans to publish all or some of the thesis and believes public access will jeopardise IP rights. Students should consider whether the thesis reports on IP that is conjointly held by themselves and other researchers, and whether they have permission to share that IP.
- iv. The subject of the thesis is an individual who is still alive or only recently deceased, whose right to privacy or cultural respect is in danger of being infringed.
- v. Is a sensitive thesis and an embargo is necessary to ensure compliance with the law or to protect public safety (e.g., where it refers to objectionable material, issues of national security or contains materials which might be considered offensive).
- vi. The maximum period of an embargo shall normally be two years, from the date of receipt of the thesis by the library. An embargoed thesis may not be placed on the web.

¹ Prior to 2007 theses were also held in print copy in the library.

Procedure

If a student wishes to embargo a thesis, application must be made to the Dean of Postgraduate Research, or DVC (or nominee), for sensitive theses using the Thesis Submission Declaration form. The student's senior supervisor (or nominee) must sign the form before it is submitted. If approved, the form must also be signed by the Dean of Postgraduate Research, or DVC if it is a sensitive thesis. The form must accompany copies of the thesis or dissertation deposited in the Library and in any academic department/school.

UC Research Repository records for embargoed theses will only include the thesis title, author and classification metadata. The thesis will not be available, the abstract will not be displayed, and there will be no opportunity to request a copy of the thesis.
