COMMUNITY LAW

Every year UC students volunteer and work with the Family Law Clinic and experience the legal system first-hand

Studying Law and Criminal Justice at UC

Real-world law

Your studies will take you out of the classroom with field trips (like to the Christchurch Women's Prison), lots of class discussions and group work, and volunteering at the Community Law Centre, a free legal service where you work with real people and their issues.

Student-led projects

You'll come across other students who are just as passionate about bringing reform, representation, and fairness to the justice system as you. You can be a part of projects such as Prison Education Project, a rehabilitation initiative run by UC Law and Criminal Justice students.

Te Tiriti and the Law

Your studies will expose you to a legal education committed to Te Tiriti partnership and Māori knowledge systems. You will explore the unique nature of law as it exists within the bicultural landscape of Aotearoa New Zealand through topical issues such as water rights; Te Tiriti; Māori land, environment, and tikanga; and how these apply in the context of a nation founded on a relationship between Tangata Whenua (Māori) and Tangata Tiriti (non-Māori people).

"I've really enjoyed learning more about the treaty and constitution. UC's values correlate to the treaty and incorporate Māori worldviews, and I think there's a lot of support for Māori students here."

Expert lecturers

Our academics have made significant contributions through their research and are well regarded in the international law community. Many of our lecturers have written the books you will learn from, and some have won premier awards for their legal publications. You may be able to research with them and even get published.

Some of our research includes:

- Law and medicine
- Serious Financial Crime
- Specialised research projects impacting Aotearoa, Antarctica, the Southern Oceans, and the Pacific. We also have strong teaching and research links with Gateway Antarctica.
- Constitutional and Treaty matters
- Disasters and the law
- Rethinking surrogacy laws in Aotearoa
- Indigenous water rights
- Forensic Brainwave Analysis technology that indicates whether or not a person has specific knowledge, and used in criminal proceedings as a way of eliminating possible suspects.

Clubs scene

There are many ways to pursue your interests, or discover new ones, outside of your academic study — we have over 160+ active clubs on campus.

You can join clubs like:

- Law for Change
- Te Pūtāiki, Māori Law Students' Society
- LawSoc
- Asian Law Students' Society
- UC Pasifika Law Students' Society
- UC Women in Law
- Criminal Justice Society (CRIMSOC).

Internships

Professional and Community Engagement (PACE) is an internship component that you may take as a one-off course in your degree. PACE courses are all about applying what you learn in your studies to a non-academic “real-world” setting. You will be matched with your internship based on your studies and your interests.

“We have an awesome faculty at the Law School here. In particular, one of the first year course coordinators makes an effort to remember names, which is quite a task with hundreds of new students each year, and he talks to you as if he’s known you for years. Having lecturers I can talk to has made it a lot easier for me to settle into life at UC as a law student.”

Degrees

Degrees are a type of qualification you can study at university — there are several types of qualifications varying in level of study and length of time, such as:

Bachelor's degrees

A bachelor's degree is an undergraduate qualification that usually takes 3–4 years to complete. We offer many bachelor's degrees.

Certificates and Diplomas

If you are unable to study a full degree, or want to add some additional study to your degree, you could complete a certificate or diploma. These have fewer courses and are often completed in 6 months to a year.

Subjects

Subjects are areas you can study in your degree. Some subjects you can continue from secondary school such as Music, Geography, English, while some you can start new at UC eg, Criminal Justice, Psychology, Marketing.

Courses

A course is a specific topic within a subject, for example a Criminal Law course within the Law subject. This involves lectures, assignments, and other forms of study. Your degree is made up of multiple courses.

Points

Each course has a points value — 1 point is equivalent to 10 hours of study. You will need to complete a certain number of points overall to successfully finish your study.

Semester

The academic year is split into three periods of study. One semester is the equivalent of two terms at secondary school.

- Semester 1: February – June
- Semester 2: July – November
- Summer: November – February.

 Non-Law courses

Each small block represents a 15-point course. However, some courses may be 30 points or more.

Bachelor of Laws students gain a professional degree of outstanding quality in four years.

You will deal with real people with real problems as part of the innovative clinical studies programme at UC, honing critical practical skills in the process of helping the community.

Study information

In the first year of your degree, you will study two core courses designed to teach you about the legal systems in Aotearoa and build your foundational skills in legal research and writing.

With good grades in both LAWS101 and LAWS110 (normally at least a B), you can advance into 200-level Law courses, all of which are subject to limited entry.

From third year, you will be able to customise your study to focus on different areas of the law — see pages 12-13 for a list of common specialisations.

You will also need to also study five non-Law courses in the first year of your degree. Popular choices include Business, History, Management, and languages. For a full list of course options, go to our website or talk to a Future Students officer.

Highlights

- UC has a specially designed Moot Court room, regularly used for client interviewing, witness examination, mooting, and negotiation competitions.
- Get work experience through internships, clinical, and community work opportunities.
- Many student clubs including LAWSOC, Women in Law, Te Pūtāiki Māori Law Students' Association, CRIMSOC, and Law for Change.
- The structure of this degree allows you to do a double degree or switch degrees if you are unable to advance to 200-level LAWS or prefer not to continue with the LLB. You can switch to other degrees like Arts, Commerce, Criminal Justice, or Science.

Career ready

- UC has Law Internship courses involving community and clinical work experience.
- Gain necessary legal skills in research, writing, analysis, and reasoning for a range of careers beyond law.
- Graduates have careers such as lawyers, policy analysts, Māori development advisors, foreign affairs officers, and journalists.

Law

“Studying Law can take you far beyond a court room or a firm.”

(International Law and Politics)

Studying Law at UC will involve looking at legal systems, policies, cases, legal material, as well as the wider social, political, and historical contexts in which our laws exist.

This degree will give you the ability to think critically, and analyse facts and issues in order to persuade by logical argument.

What will my study involve?

- Work on real issues and cases through internships and community work.
- Take part in mooting, debating, competitions, and other events.
- An important part of your studies will be exploring biculturalism and Indigenous knowledge.

Courses

First-year Law courses introduce you to the foundations of the legal system in Aotearoa, analysis methods, and legal writing and research. You will also take non-law courses that interest you in your first year.

Further study may involve more specialised study including commercial law, Māori land and resource law, criminal justice, and environmental law.

Topics can include:

- family law
- serious financial crime
- intellectual property law
- international law.

Each small block represents a 15-point course. However, some courses may be 30 points or more.

The BCJ is the first degree of its kind in Aotearoa, combining multidisciplinary academic study with a strong vocational focus.

Criminal Justice studies take a 360-degree look at the criminal justice system and its processes, including governance, enforcement, rehabilitation, and improvement. The degree draws together UC's expertise in criminology, sociology, developmental and behavioural psychology, policing, criminal law and procedure, and human services.

Study information

The first year of study is designed to give you a broad introduction to the criminal justice system in Aotearoa.

From second year, you can choose to study topics such as forensics, policing, criminal law and procedure, and bioethics.

Highlights

- Strong links with employers in the crime and justice fields gives you the chance to work closely with current policies and legislation.
- Enjoy learning from courses across criminology, sociology, developmental and behavioural psychology, criminal law and procedure, policing, and human services.
- Join student club CRIMSOC and meet like-minded students.

Career ready

- Practical experience examining our justice system and identifying opportunities for reform.
- Opportunity to increase your skills while working.
- Graduates work in areas such as probation and parole, forensics, public and private investigation and security, social work, criminal justice policy, and the police.

Criminal Justice

“My degrees have put me in the best possible place to positively impact this system.”

Charlie
Master of Criminal Justice, Bachelor of Criminal Justice

Criminal Justice involves understanding the law and psychology behind crime, its causes, and the treatment of convicted offenders.

UC is the only university in Aotearoa that offers you a degree in criminal justice with innovative practical teaching. UC also shares close links with the police and justice sector.

What will my study involve?

- Learn about the justice system including social and human services, and psychology.
- Examine current policies and identify opportunities for criminal justice reform.
- Take optional courses in topics such as forensic science, linguistics, and financial crime.

Courses

First-year criminal justice courses teach you about legal and social issues in Aotearoa, and introduce you to psychology and the neuroscience of why people commit crimes. In the later years of the degree, you will be able to critically examine our legal systems and the current effectiveness in preventing and prosecuting crimes.

Topics can include:

- youth justice
- Te Tiriti o Waitangi
- violence in society
- history of gangs in Aotearoa.

canterbury.ac.nz/courseinfo

Career opportunities

You will be able to look at criminal justice through a wide lens, giving you a strong foundation in understanding how Criminal Justice in society works in Aotearoa and internationally. You will also gain research skills in your area of interest in policing and the justice system.

Career pathways could include:

- government including prisons, probation, and parole
- forensics
- criminal justice policy and reform
- public and private investigation.

Law specialisations and career opportunities

There are many career pathways you can take with a Law degree. In the third and fourth years of your Law degree at UC, you can choose to specialise in one or more areas.

Commercial Law and Litigation

Commercial Law deals with all legal matters connected with commercial business transactions, including business structures, issue of shares, contracts, sale of property, loans, taxation, and insurance and related matters.

Law graduates interested in these fields are most likely to find employment in law firms, share brokers, accountancy firms, insurance companies, banks, government, or private businesses.

Commercial Litigation is concerned with the settlement of commercial disputes.

Community Law

Community Law is concerned with advising people who cannot afford to engage a law firm, or who are otherwise disadvantaged.

Law graduates who are interested in this kind of work are most likely to find employment in community law centres or with activist groups.

Criminal Law

Criminal Law is concerned primarily with the functioning of the criminal justice system.

Law graduates interested in this field might find employment in legal practice, Te Tari Ture o te Karauna | Crown Law Office, Tāhū o te Ture | Ministry of Justice, the Probation Service, community law centres, or Ngā Pirihimana o Aotearoa | New Zealand Police.

Employment and Industrial Law

Employment and Industrial Law deals with employment contracts, health and safety, taxation, and social security.

Law graduates interested in these fields might find employment in commercial organisations, accountancy firms, community law centres and other advisory agencies, employers' organisations, employment advocates, or trade unions.

Environmental Law

Environmental Law deals with matters relating to national and international environmental protection and sustainable management of resources, including Māori resources.

Law graduates in this field are most likely to find employment in private practice, iwi organisations, or central and local government.

General Legal Practice

General Legal Practice is conducted mainly by small to medium-sized law firms. They deal with a wide range of concerns including property law; family law; commercial and consumer law; criminal law; and trusts, wills, and estates.

Law graduates interested in General Practice are most likely to find employment with law firms throughout Aotearoa.

Information, Media, and Technology Law

Information, Media, and Technology Law is concerned with the regulation and the dissemination and ownership of all kinds of information.

Law graduates interested in these fields might find employment with law firms, patent attorneys, or as in-house counsel in radio, television, or technology firms.

International Law

International Law concerns the relationship of nations to each other. International Law also affects large parts of domestic law ranging from areas as diverse as criminal law and environmental law, but is essentially the concern of the state.

Law graduates in this field are most likely to find employment in central government (including in Manatū Aorere | Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Trade) or international and non-governmental organisations.

Māori Land and Resource Law

Māori Land and Resource Law is an area of growing importance which deals with claims under Te Tiriti o Waitangi Treaty of Waitangi and the application of natural resource law to Māori resources.

Law graduates in this field are most likely to find employment in private practice, iwi organisations, or central and local government.

Property and Resource Management Law

Property and Resource Management Law deals with matters relating to the creation, ownership, possession, and transfer of both tangible and intangible property.

Law graduates interested in these fields could find employment with law firms, central and local government, patent attorneys, property management and development companies, or engineering consultancies.

Public Law

Public Law is concerned with the organisation and functioning of the institutions of government and the relationship of those institutions to its citizens and other bodies.

Law graduates in this field are likely to find employment in central and local government, as well as in private practice.

Other specialisations

There are other specialised areas of Law which students may choose as part of their degree eg, Law and Sport; Law and Medicine; Gender and the Law; Genetics, Neuroscience and the Criminal Law; and Artificial Intelligence and the Law.

NOTE: It is not always possible for all courses to be offered every year. See www.canterbury.ac.nz/courseinfo for current courses.

Graduate and postgraduate study

Another option to gain specialist knowledge in your area of interest is through graduate and postgraduate study. You can also combine law study with other related subjects.

Postgraduate Law study can lead to many career paths such as the public and private sector, international organisations, non-governmental organisations, and more. UC alumni include leading academics and policy makers in Aotearoa New Zealand and abroad.

Where can Criminal Justice take me?

The Bachelor of Criminal Justice is a real-world degree with relevance across international government agencies and in the organisations that work with them.

Our Criminal Justice programmes are unique in Aotearoa. It prepares graduates for a varied career, enabling mobility across roles, agencies, and public and private sectors.

A theoretical understanding of crime and justice is not enough. To make a difference, we need to know how to apply that knowledge to maximum effect. Government agencies are increasingly working together, and knowledge and understanding of how each functions is crucial.

Our Criminal Justice and Law academics have real life experience working in and with criminal justice agencies. They work closely with employers to ensure that their courses deliver the outcomes in demand in the real world, and give you opportunities to complete internships as part of your degree.

Criminal justice agencies

There is demand for Criminal Justice graduates within Ngā Pirihimana o Aotearoa | New Zealand Police, Ara Poutama Aotearoa | Department of Corrections, and Te Tāhū o te Ture | Ministry of Justice. Roles range from frontline policing, corrections officer, and probation officer roles to regional and national advisor roles.

Allied agencies

Criminal Justice graduates find employment with other agencies working with vulnerable populations. Graduates work in frontline roles as advisors or within policy. A broad understanding of how agencies work with each other, and the legal environment in which they operate, will prepare you to work in a variety of these areas.

Social agencies

There are many non-government organisations that work with criminal justice and allied agencies, providing services to those within the criminal justice system. These might include reintegration services, restorative justice, accommodation services, or employment services.

Private sector organisations

A wide range of private sector organisations work with criminal justice agencies. These include private prison providers, technology companies, education and training providers, and environmental consultants.

Other ways to study Criminal Justice at UC

Certificate in Criminal Justice

For those already working in the justice sector or those who aspire to, the Certificate in Criminal Justice is a great option. You can study the Certificate on campus, by distance learning, and via Tuihono UC UC Online. The Certificate provides a broad overview of the criminal justice sector and is completed within a shorter timeframe. It gives learners the opportunity to gain a qualification to progress in their current workplace or can act as a pathway into the Bachelor of Criminal Justice.

See page 10 for more information.

Postgraduate options

A range of postgraduate options enable both new graduates and workers to further develop the skills needed to assume leadership roles. The Graduate Diploma, Master's, and PhD in Criminal Justice allow researchers to focus on a work-based project of significance to them or the organisation for which they work.

“I would encourage anyone considering pursuing a career in the justice sector to complete the BCJ. This degree provides students with foundational knowledge that can kickstart your career in many different roles. Explore the options available to you within the justice sector outside of the “well-known” roles, you may not even know your dream job exists yet!”

Pastoral Care

The Education (Pastoral Care of Tertiary and International Learners) Code of Practice 2021 is designed to guide institutions in their practice and to protect students when they study in Aotearoa. UC is a signatory to the Code and is required to meet the standards set by the New Zealand government.

“Within my class, we’re all very much a whānau. We’ve built a connection, going from strangers to family, which is a credit to our teachers for creating that environment of safety and belonging — that’s whanaungatanga. And tiakitanga reminds me of the whole UC experience — everyone doing what they can.”
