Student Profile

With a career solving finances and investments for New Zealand businesses, I am thoroughly pleased my studies gave me such practical management experience. I always want to apply theoretical knowledge to practical business situations in day-to-day lives. The programme offered me better avenues to connect with local businesses and solve real problems while learning new things in the world of finance and accounting. Since graduating, I have worked as an Accounting and Finance Officer with Bonham Interior Ltd, preparing financial statements, investment analysis, and portfolio management for a range of companies working with the interior design business.

Student Profile

'Finance is a field which fuels an industry that essentially oils the cogs of a nation's economy. The work that a qualified graduate will be exposed to here will give that person opportunities to help real businesses reach their goals, encourage output and uphold the capital markets.'

What careers can this lead to?

Demand for both accounting and finance professionals in New Zealand and abroad continues to grow, creating considerable opportunities for employment. Gaining an MFM will position you to undertake analyst and decision-making support roles in business, such as business analyst, investment analyst and management accountant. As a graduate, you will be able to:

- gain exemptions from the academic requirements from professional accounting bodies
- work in consultancy firms, government organisations, not-for-profit or commercial enterprises.
