Software Engineering

Our society relies on software-based systems, with applications ranging from transportation, telecommunications, and avionics systems to those used in government, business, banking and health.

Software systems have a high degree of complexity. They often consist of millions of lines of code produced by large teams of programmers.

Software engineers ensure the timely and cost-effective delivery of reliable and efficient software systems.

Year 13 school subjects required:
- Physics
- Calculus